The 163rd Infantry Regiment was an organic element of the 41st Infantry Division. The "Sunset" Division, later known as the "Jungleers," was originally a National Guard unit composed of men from Oregon, Washington, Idaho, and, as the 163rd Infantry, from Montana. The Division was activated September 16, 1940 and participated in the West Coast training maneuvers until early 1942, when elements of the Division began shipping overseas. The Regiment departed San Francisco on March 19, 1942 and arrived at Australia on April 6, 1942. For the remainder of 1942 the Regiment trained for amphibious landings and jungle warfare. In late December of 1942 the Regiment was sent to New Guinea where the Regiment defeated the Japanese at Sanananda. The Regiment leap-frogged up the coast of New Guinea, taking part in the capture of Wake Island, Aitape, and Biak Island. From New Guinea the Regiment went into the southern Philippine Islands, securing the Sulu Archipelago, and taking the Zamboanga peninsula. At the conclusion of the war the Regiment was sent to Japan to serve as occupation troops. The Division was inactivated in Japan on December 31, 1945

The records of the 163rd Infantry Regiment contain narrative histories, operations reports, journals, S-1 and S-2 staff sections reports, and organic component operations reports. The material has been divided into two Subseries. The first Subseries comprises regimental records, information of the Regiment as a single unit.

The second Subseries comprises information concerning the operations of organic elements of the Regiment. The narrative histories within this Subseries are of interest because of the post-induction, pre-war activities described.

The 168th Infantry Regiment was originally a component of the Iowa National Guard. On February 10, 1941, it was inducted into the U. S. Army where it was designated an organic element of the 34th Infantry Division. As part of the 34th Division, the Regiment participated in the invasions of North Africa and Italy, where it was active in the Tunisia, Naples-Foggia, Rome-Arno, North Apennines and Po River campaigns.

This collection contains practically no information on the activities of the 34th Infantry Division and its organic elements. There are no records of the 34th Division, its component field artillery Battalions, or its component regiments, with the exception of the 168th Regiment. This series consists of one folder, which contains information on the induction of the Regiment into the U.S. Army in 1941, and the conclusion of its National Guard duties. For more information on the combat history of the 168th Regiment and the 34 Division, see the U.S. Army Almanac, a copy of which is in the Eisenhower Library Research Room.

The 179th Infantry Regiment was a component part of the 45th Infantry Division. It was activated in 1940 and spent its first two years training in the United States. In June 1943 the Division was sent to North Africa, from where it invaded Sicily the following month. In September 1943 it invaded Italy where it spent almost a year of bitter fighting in the mountains of central Italy and at the Anzio beachhead. In August 1944 the Division participated in the invasion of Southern France. It fought its way north along the Rhone Valley to the Vosges Mountains and then turned eastward toward Germany. In 1945 the Division crosses southern Germany to capture Munich and was stationed near Dachau at the end of the war.

The records of the 179th Regiment consist of histories, journals, and miscellaneous documents. The material is fragmentary and does not constitute a complete history of the regiment. The most detailed account is provided by the monthly histories, which cover the period October 1943- November 1945. The 186th Infantry Regiment, an organic element of the 41st Infantry Division, was activated on September 16, 1940. Within a week of induction, the Division reported to Camp Murray, Washington. In early February, 1942, the alert came to prepare the Regiment for movement overseas, and the Regiment left San Francisco April 25th. The Regiment arrived in Australia in mid-May, 1942, and resumed the routine of training and field exercises, specializing in small unit tactics and amphibious assault techniques. In late January, 1943, the 186th Regiment relieved elements of the 32nd Division at Buna and Gona, on the northeast coast of New Guinea, and conducted patrolling and mopping-up sorties against the remaining remnants of the enemy. In July, 1943, the Regiment returned to Australia for rest and reorganization, and to prepare for its next mission. In April, 1944, the Regiment began the first of a series of operations, when on April 23rd the troops assaulted the Japanese base at Hollandia Bay, Dutch New Guinea. Within ten days of the landings at Hollandia, plans were being laid for the coming operation at an island the men of the 186th Infantry would come to call "Bloody Biak." Situated in the center of Geelvink Bay, the island possessed there strategically located airdromes for planned Allied advances. On May 27, 1944, the Regiment and elements of 41st Infantry Division landed ashore near the village of Bosnek. The rugged terrain featured a narrow beach backed by cliffs one-hundred eighty feet high and covered with dense tropical growth. At the airdrome area was a small plain, no larger than two by two miles deep, again with steep rises inland. The enemy was well-entrenched and tenacious. The battle raged through July and officially ended August 20, 1944, although mopping-up was no simple task. From Biak the Regiment sailed for the Philippines, and on February 28, 1945, invaded long-and-narrow Palawan Island. Landing virtually at the slim "waist" of the island at Puerto Princesa, the Regiment combed the island, destroying enemy opposition and securing Palawan for the Allies. In the middle of March, elements of the 186th Infantry arrived from Palawan to the Zamboanga peninsula of Mindanao. From March to the cessation of hostilities and the surrender of Japan, the Regiment remained in the Philippines. In October the Regiment landed in Japan to take on occupation duty. The Division was inactivated, in Japan, On December 31, 1945.

The records of the 186th Infantry Regiment contain narrative histories, records of events, journals, operational reports, maps and overlays, photographs, rosters, personal narratives, and miscellaneous historical materials. These records have been divided into five Subseries, Subseries I through IV pertain to Regimental operations and activities. The fifth comprises materials relating to battalion, company, and staff section reports. Arranged according to the DRB classification system and chronologically there under.

Among particular interesting items are the personal narrative histories, one of which gives a critical, yet humorous, account of five days aboard an LST crowded with assault troops and gear, soaked by rain and steamed by the heat.

The 188th Parachute Infantry Regiment was an organic element of the 11th Airborne Division. This Division was activated in 1943 and participated in the New Guinea, Southern Philippines, Leyte and Luzon campaigns of World War II. After the war it served on occupation duty in Japan until May 1949 when it returned to the United States.

The bulk of the records of the 188th Regiment consist of monthly narrative histories covering the period of its occupation duty in Japan. These contain much information on the problems of occupation troops, such as dealing with subversive activities and labor unrest.

The records also contain information on the regiment's operations in the Philippine Islands. There is a detailed history of the Leyte campaign consisting of field orders, G-3 and S-3 reports, and a narrative account of the regiment's activities. Also of interest is a short account of the capture of Mount Malepunyo on Luzon Island by the regiment.

The 194th Glider Infantry Regiment was an organic element of the 17th Airborne Division. This division was activated in 1943 and participated in the Ardennes-Alsace, Rhineland and Central Europe campaigns of World War II. In March 1945 it took part in Operation Varsity, the first airborne invasion over the Rhine River into Germany.

The records of the 194th Regiment consist of several G-2 reports which provide information on preparations for Operation Varsity. The reports contain estimates of the enemy order of battle, a photo interpretation report, and instructions for security measures to be taken during the operation. For more detailed information on the history of the 194th Regiment, the researcher should consult the records of the 17th Airborne Division.

The 201st Infantry Regiment was activated on January 6, 1941 and served on security duty in the Aleutian Islands during 1942 and 1943. Early in 1944 the regiment returned to the United States where it was stationed until it was inactivated on September 18, 1945. During its tour of duty in the Aleutians, the regiment was subjected to several brief enemy attacks. However, it took part in no large-scale military operations and was not attached to an infantry division, as were most other regiments.

The records of the 201st Regiment consist of a narrative history of the regiment and a copy of the order for its deactivation. These documents provide a brief summary of the history of the regiment but contain few details of its operations.

The 222nd Infantry Regiment was an organic element of the 42nd Infantry Division. This division was activated in 1943 and landed in France in December 1944. During the remainder of the war, it participated in the Ardennes-Alsace, Rhineland, and Central Europe campaigns. After the end of the war the Division was on occupation duty in Austria until it was inactivated in June 1946.

The bulk of the records of the 222nd Regiment consist of monthly historical reports. Each report contains a narrative account of the regiment's operations, a copy of the unit journal, and in many instances, maps and map overlays. The reports provide much detail on the operations of the regiment during the time it was in active combat and during the early months of its occupation duty.

In addition to the historical reports there are several S-2 Operational Reports which also pertain to the occupation duty of the regiment. Other items of interest in the series include a large number of press releases prepared by the regiment's public relations office. These contain human interest stories and other accounts of the regiment and its personnel.

The Regiments participated in the Rhineland and Central Europe campaigns, liberating the infamous Dachau concentration camp. The Division remained in Europe as occupation troops in Austria until deactivation in June, 1946.

The 232nd Infantry Regiment series consists of histories, unit journal, battalion reports, chaplain's report, I and E section reports, memoranda, and the Medical detachment report. These materials, in the main, date from May through September 1945, and are arranged according to the DRB classification system and chronologically there under.

The 253rd, 254th, and 255th Infantry Regiments were the organic infantry elements of the 63rd Infantry Division. The Division was activated June 15, 1943. Elements of the Division, including the three infantry regiments, arrived in France on December 8, 1944, and were committed to action as Task Force Harris in the defense of the east flank of the Seventh Army along the Rhine. The entire Division entered the line on February 6, 1945. The regiments attacked across the Saar River, through the Muhlen Woods, and smashed through the Siegfried Line by March 15, 1945. The Division captured Heidelberg on March 30. The Division then swung to the southeast, crossing the Danube and capturing many towns and villages before being taken out of the line and assigned security duty. The Division returned to the United States during September 1945 and was deactivated on September 27.

The records of the 253rd and 254th Infantry Regiments are at best sketchy, less than 100 pages (approximate). These records are arranged according to the DRB classification and chronologically there under.

The records of the 255th Infantry Regiment are more complete. The bulk of these records are operations reports but also include the 3rd Battalion's journal file for June 1945. These records are arranged according to the DRB classification system and chronologically thereunder.

The 259th and 260th Infantry Regiments were organic elements of the 65th Infantry Division. The Division was activated August 16, 1943 and arrived in France on January 21, 1945. The Division continued training until March 1, when elements began relieving the 26th Infantry Division. The entire Division was in the line by March 6 and conducted an aggressive defense in the sector along the Saar from Orsholz to Wadgassen. On March 17 the Division attacked across the Saar, captured the town of Saarlautern two days later, and raced to the Rhine, crossing March 30. The Division then ran into heavy enemy resistance, coupled with local counterattacks, yet the Division maintained pressure and continued to push forward. With German defenses crumbling perceptibly, the Division crossed the Danube and captured Linz, Austria on May 5. On May 9, the official end of the war in Europe, elements of the Division contacted elements of the advancing Russian Army at Erlauf. The Division was inactivated while in Germany on August 31, 1945.

The Regimental records for the 259th and 260th Infantries comprise primarily unit histories. The records are arranged by regiment according to the DRB classification system and chronologically there under.

The 263rd and 264th Infantry Regiments were organic components of the "Black Panther" 66th Infantry Division. The Regiments were activated, along with the Division, April 15, 1943. The regiments arrived in England on November 26, 1944 where they continued advanced infantry tactics and individual physical training to the date of departure for France, December 24. During the Channel crossing a troop transport was torpedoed, costing the lives of 762 officers and men. The Division relieved the 94th Infantry Division in the Brittany-Loire area, with the assigned task of containing the enemy within the St. Nazaire and Lorient pockets. This task was accomplished through aggressive daily patrols, the securing of limited objectives, and methodical harassing and interdiction artillery fires upon enemy positions. On April 16, 1945, the Division repulsed a strong German attack in the vicinity of La Croix, continued to apply pressure and subsequently captured many German strong points during the next two weeks. The Division was returned home to the United States in November and was inactivated November 8, 1945.

The records of the 263rd and 264th Infantries are decidedly sparse. The 263rd Infantry records include a preliminary unit history, press clippings and a report from the medical section. The records of the 264th Infantry are comprised wholly of S-3 periodic reports. The S-3 reports cover the year 1945 from January 1, when the Division was committed to the line, through May 16, 1945, one week after the end of the war in Europe.

The 271st and 272nd Infantry Regiments were organic elements of the "Fighting Sixty-ninth" Infantry Division. The Regiments, with the Division, were activated May 15, 1943. The Division arrived in England on December 12, 1944, where training continued, until departing for the Continent. The Division landed at Le Havre on January 24, 1945, and immediately was transported to Belgium, relieving the 99th Infantry Division in defensive positions on the Siegfried Line, February 12. The Division moved to the offensive on February 27, pushing rapidly eastward capturing the high ridges at Prether, and the towns of Schmidheim and Dahlem by March 7. The Division paused briefly to mop-up before striking forward once again. The Division crossed the Rhine and quickly captured the fortress at Ehrenbreitstein on March 27. The Division relieved the 80th Infantry Division at Kassel and continued the attack, April 5. By April 14 the Division had captured Munden and Weissenfels despite sharp opposition. The Division drove on to Leipzig, April 19, and captured that famous old city after fierce door-to-door fire fights. The "Fighting Sixty-ninth" continued its push to the Mulde River and made first contact with the leading elements of the advancing Russian Armies in the vicinity of Riesa and again at Torgau April 25. The division remained in this area until it shipped home and was inactivated on September 7, 1945.

The vast bulk of the records of the 271st Infantry Regiment are in the form of journal files, comprising nearly 98 percent of the series. Included as well are histories, battalion records, and staff section reports. The journal files are excellent sources of materials, containing diverse reports, journals, and memoranda.

The records of the 272 Infantry Regiment are extremely sparse. These records are almost entirely unit journals, with one folder containing medical histories of enlisted men.

The 310th and 311th Infantry Regiments were organic units of the 78th Infantry Division. This Division was activated in 1942 and landed in France on November 22, 1944. During the rest of the war the regiments participated in the Rhineland, Ardennes-Alsace, and Central Europe campaigns. The unit was in combat for 125 days. After the end of the war the Division went on occupation duty near Marburg, Germany. It was inactivated May 22, 1946.

The bulk of the records of the two regiments consist of after action reports and unit journals. There are also a few S-1 reports and operational plans with overlays. The narratives on the Remagen Bridgehead are quite interesting. The unit citation for May 30, 1945 contains an interesting account of the 311th's skirmishes in the winter of 1945.

For further information on these two regiments see the 78th Infantry Division.

The 361st, 362nd and 363rd Infantry Regiments were organic elements of the 91st Infantry Division. This Division was activated in 1942 and landed in Italy in June 1944. During the rest of the war, it participated in the Rome-Arno, North Apennines and Po Valley campaigns. After the end of the war the Division was on occupation duty near Trieste until August 1945 when it returned to the U.S. It was inactivated around the end of November 1945.

The bulk of the records of the three regiments consist of narrative histories which describe the operations of the regiments while they were in Italy during World War II. For each regiment the narratives cover the period from the time it arrived in Italy until it was deactivated in November 1945. The histories of the 361st and 363rd Regiments also contain information dating from the time they were activated in 1942.

In addition to the narrative histories, the records of the 361st and 363rd Regiments contain some other items of interest. The 363rd Regiment has unit journals and map overlays filed with the narrative histories. These provide detailed information to supplement the narrative accounts of the regiment's activities. The series also contains information on awards and citations received by the regiment and its personnel.

The records of the 361st Regiment contain some S-3 and operations journals, filed separately from the narrative histories. These journals cover only scattered periods in the regiment's history. Also of interest are several reports summarizing the results of prisoner of war interrogations during April 1945.

364th INFANTRY REGIMENT, 1945

100 pages (approximate)
Box 1493

The 364th Infantry Regiment spent the latter part of World War II on security duty in the Aleutian Islands. During 1945 it was based on Amchitka Island where it repulsed several enemy attacks. However, it took part in no large-scale military operations, and was not attached to an infantry division as were most other regiments.

The records of the 364th Regiment consist of several journals and reports which provide detailed information on the operations of the regiment. However, the records cover only scattered dates during March, May, June and July 1945 and do not form a coherent whole. There are also a few maps and map overlays which show the location of the regiment's activities on Amchitka. Several photographs showing the construction of the regiment's base were found with the records. These have been transferred to the audiovisual collection of the Eisenhower Library.

The 365th Infantry Regiment was an organic element of the 92nd Infantry Division. The Division was activated in 1942 and left the United States for overseas in 1944. Elements of the Division arrived in Italy in August 1944 but the Division as a whole did not enter combat until October 1944. For the remainder of the war, it participated in the North Apennines and Po Valley campaigns.

The records of the 365th Regiment consist of field orders, operations instructions, periodic reports and map overlays. Most of the material is dated between January and May 1945 and does not provide a continuous account of regimental operations. Of particular interest is a study of the effects of artillery fire on infantry attacks, which was compiled during the latter part of 1944.

The 394th Infantry Regiment was an organic element of the 99th Infantry Division. This Division was activated in November, 1942 and arrived in Europe in October, 1944. It saw combat in the Rhineland, Ardennes-Alsace, and Central Europe campaigns. During the Battle of the Bulge this Division helped to blunt the German offensive. On December 16, 1944 the Intelligence and Reconnaissance Platoon, 394th Regiment, conducted a significant holding action at the Belgian village of Lanzerath, which stalled a major German attack for 18 hours.

The records of the 394th Infantry Regiment contain a history of the Regiment for the year 1944, monthly regimental histories covering the period February to May, 1945, and after-action reports for the months November, 1944 through May, 1945. Also included are monthly histories of the Medical Detachment, 394th Infantry Regiment.

These records contain some details on the Regiment's operations during the Battle of the Bulge in the campaign in Germany.

The Regiment saw most of its action in Italy, participating in the Rome-Arno, North Apennines, and Po River campaigns.

The series contains unit histories, historical reports, journals, and a few photographs. The material is not organized into sub series but is organized according to the classification scheme of the Departmental Records Branch and chronologically thereunder.

Box 1531

The 501st Parachute Infantry Regiment was an organic element of the 101st Airborne Division. This Division was activated in 1942 and entered combat in 1944 when it parachuted into France during the Normandy Invasion. It later participated in Operation Market in Holland, one of the largest airborne operations in history. During the German offensive in the Battle of the Bulge, the Division became famous for its defense of Bastogne, Belgium.

The bulk of the records in this series consist of after action reports and periodic reports, most of which pertain to the role of the regiment in the defense of Bastogne and the Battle of the Bulge. There is only fragmentary information on the activities of the regiment during Operation Market in Holland. Of particular interest is a short narrative history which describes the activities of the regiment during the first few days of the operation.

The records relating to the Normandy Invasion consist of unit reports and map overlays which describe the operations of most of the organic elements of the 101st Airborne Division. Some of the material pertains to the 501st Regiment. The material is fragmentary, but it is useful for showing the activities of the regiment as it related to the Division as a whole.

During the German offensive in the Battle of the Bulge, the Division became famous for its defense of Bastogne, Belgium.

The records in this series consist primarily of after action reports which provide a detailed account of the operations of the Regiment during the Battle of the Bulge and the closing days of the war. The earlier activities of the Regiment are described by a series of narrative histories which provide information on the activation and training of the Regiment in the United States and its activities during the Normandy Invasion. The histories also contain an account of the Regiment's defense of Bastogne, Belgium, during the Battle of the Bulge.

A large number of photographs were found with the series. These have been transferred to the audiovisual collection of the Eisenhower Library.

503rd PARACHUTE REGIMENTAL COMBAT TEAM, 1941 – 1945

Box 1533

The 503rd Parachute Regimental Combat Team was an airborne unit composed of the 503rd Parachute Infantry Regiment, the 462nd Airborne Field Artillery Battalion, and Company C of the 161st Airborne engineer Battalion. The combat Team served in the South Pacific during World War II. It made its first jump into New Guinea in September 1943 as part of Operation Outlook. In November 1944 the unit moved to the Philippine Islands where it fought on Mindoro and Negros Islands, and recaptured Corregidor Island at the mouth of Manila Bay.

This series consists of histories, periodic reports, field orders and correspondence. The bulk of the material pertains to the Military operations of the Combat Team. For each major operation there is a narrative account which gives details on preparations for the battle, actual combat events, and lessons learned from the battle. The narratives are supplemented by S-3 reports and field orders. Several maps showing the location of the battle sites have been transferred to the map collection.

Other items of interest in the series include a history of Company C of the 503rd Parachute Infantry Regiment from the time it was activated in 1941 until the end of October 1945. There are also several documents on the training of the Combat Team before it entered combat in 1943.

The 504th and 505th Parachute Infantry Regiments were organic elements of the 82nd Airborne Division. This division was activated in 1942 and saw action in Sicily and Italy. Later, the division participated in the Normandy Invasion and Operation Market.

The military activities of the 504th and 505th Regiments are poorly documented in this series. The records of the 505th Regiment consist of a narrative history of the Regiment during May and June 1945. This provides some information on the Regiment's work in the military government and its preparations for leaving Germany after the end of the war.

The records of the 504th Regiment contain a valuable report on the invasion of Sicily in July 1943, which was code-named Operation Husky. The report describes the planning and execution of the airborne phase of Operation Husky and includes information on the role of the 82nd Airborne Division in the operation. Other records in this series include a history of the 504th Regiment during 1948 when it was stationed at Fort Bragg, North Carolina, and a narrative account of the role played by the 3rd Battalion in a battle in Germany in January 1945. For further information on the general history of the 504th and 505th Regiments, see the records of the 82nd Airborne Division.

The 506th Parachute Infantry Regiment was an organic element of the 101st Airborne Division. During the German offensive in the Battle of the Bulge, the Division became famous for its defense of Bastogne, Belgium.

This series consists of histories, after action reports, periodic reports, journals and orders. The records are arranged according to the classification scheme of the Departmental Records Branch and chronologically there under.

The history of the 506th Regiment is very well documented by this series. The historical reports describe and activities of the Regiment from the time it was activated until October 1945. The after action reports and periodic reports, which contain more detailed information, cover only the period between September 1944 and May 1945. The Regiment's participation in Operation Market and its defense of Bastogne are described in great detail. There is relatively little information on its part in the Normandy Invasion. Of particular interest is a collection of songs performed by the Regimental Band. These are filed at the end of the series.

The 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment was an organic element of the 17th Airborne Division. The Regiment first entered combat when it's parachuted into France during the Normandy Invasion in June 1944. The rest of the Division arrived in France in December 1944 and helped to recapture territory taken by the Germans during the Battle of the Bulge. In March 1945 the Division took part in Operation Varsity, the first airborne invasion over the Rhine River into Germany itself. For the remainder of the war the Division was engaged in capturing the Ruhr Basin and performing military government activities in the area. In June 1945 it returned to France for redeployment.

The records in this series include histories, periodic reports, field orders, journals, miscellaneous documents and airplane manifests. Most of this material pertains to the activities of the Regiment during Operation Varsity. However, a few records are dated as late as June 1945. Of particular interest are the S-3 periodic reports which describe the difficulties of dealing with displaced persons. The airplane manifests, which are titled "Form B Parachute," list the persons and equipment carried by each airplane and glider during Regimental airborne operations. A typical form lists the number of the airplane, the names of the crew, the names of Regimental personnel, and the type of equipment being carried to the drop zone. The forms pertain to Operation Neptune (the combat phase of the Normandy Invasion), and Operation Varsity.

The 893rd Tank Destroyer Battalion participated in the Normandy, Northern France, Rhineland, Ardennes-Alsace, and Central Europe campaigns during World War II. There are very few records of the battalion in this series. The most useful are two after action reports covering September and October 1944 and a report of battalion operations covering May to September 1945. In addition to these, there are also a few documents pertaining to the guarding of various installations by the Battalion after the end of the war.

The 899th Tank Destroyer Battalion was activated on July 1, 1940 and was originally known as the 99th Infantry Anti-Tank Battalion. The designation was changed to the 899th Tank Destroyer Battalion on December 15, 1941. After training in the United States, the battalion participated in the Tunisia, Rome-Arno, Normandy, Northern France, Ardennes-Alsace, Rhineland, and Central Europe campaigns during World War II. After the end of the war, the battalion returned to the United States where it was inactivated on December 27, 1945.

This series consists primarily of after action reports which describe the operations of the Battalion in France and Germany. Many of these contain S-2 reports, operations reports, and unit journals which provide an extremely detailed account of the battalion's activities. There is very little information on the Tunisia campaign and none on the Rome-Arno campaign.

Several photographs showing the personnel of the Battalion and a visit by the 1942 Miss America were transferred to the audiovisual collection.
